of the handicap games of the Twelfth Regiment, Dec. 17, 1888, when he finished third in a one and a half mile race. At the A. A. U. meeting in Madison Square Garden, a short while afterward, he wan the one mile handicap from the one aundred yard mark in 4.37 1-5.

He finished a good third in several subsequent contests, and his first victory was at the handicap run of the Fastime A. C. over the Fort George Fastime A. C. over the Fast Wood of the Fastime A. Out 2, 1889, was the date of his record Out 2, 1888, was the date of his record ateeplechase performance, when he made a record of ten miles in 52 minutes 22.2-5 seconds. This was at the National Cross-Country Association games. A week later, Nov. 2, he ran four miles in 20 minutes 27.1-5 seconds behind the best amateur record, heid by E. C. Carter. His record of 52 minutes 38.2-5 seconds is 1 minutes 18.2-5 seconds behind the ten-mile time of W. G. George, the English champion. But George himself admitted while here that his time in England was not better than Day's performance hore.

mitted while here that his time in England was not better than Day's performance hore.

Then Day began attacking records in armost. May 17, 1880, he ran 1 1-2 miles in 7.05 4-5, the best American time ever made. On the same day he ran 1 3-4 miles in 8.18 1-5, which also stands as the best amateur performance at that distances. His performances at greater distances achieved also the best amateur records, and are as tollows: May 17, 1890, 2 miles in 9.23 3-5; May 30, 1890, 2 1-2 miles in 12.10 3-5, and 2 1-4 miles in 10.52 4-5; same day, 3 miles in 14.38. On Feb. 10, 180, he had run 3 miles on a board floor in Brooklyn in 15.12 2-5. He ran 4 miles in record time at the club grounds Nov. 16, 1889, making the distance in 20.15 4-6, his time at 3 3-4 miles being 19.01, also a record. Day's 10 mile time, made at the Staten Island Club games Oct. 28, 1889, is still the American record, 5.238 3-5. Day was a young man of apparently delicate physique, and puzzled athletes and trainers, who vainly tried to figure wherein lay his wonderful speed and endurance. He was careless in training, not working falthfully in preparation, seven just previous to his best performances. He was an inveterate smoker of cigarettes, which, he used to say, had strangely not affected his mind.

The miniature boom in the stock market since Wall street operators made up their minds that the new Tariff bill would become a law has entailed heavy losses in quarters where the bearish feel ing on securities was rampant.

As is usually the case in a rising market, the dyed-in-the-woot bears have contested the upward movement inch by inch. The result is that margins have been wiped out, and rumors of failures are rife.

This morning the names of two Wall This morning the names of two Wall is street firms were mentioned, and an is announcement of failures would have to occasioned little surprise.

It is understood that the firms in quention have called upon their friends for assistance, and that they may be able to pull through after all.

One of the firms said to be embarrassed was in difficulties a few years ago, having been heavily loaded with Northern Pacific and other Villard stocks when that group of shares broke with a crash.
